

BCTC's Arts in Focus and the Newtown Learning Commons presents:

Leif Erickson

---Reading is a Way of Liberation!---

Join your friends and colleagues for a reception and reading of selections from the writings of Leif Erickson!

Leif Erickson thinks language is a tightrope over meaning and a way of liberation. He's got a few degrees and some publications, but he says his real "qualifications" consist of a life-long obsession with words, sentences, paragraphs, essays, stories, poetry, and books. An Associate Professor of English at BCTC, Erickson proclaims that he would teach to the empty air if no one signed up for his classes, for he believes language is so tied up in meaning that the two concepts form an existential caduceus, drawing all of humanity into its healing shadow. He is also a self-described "art groupie" who surrounds himself with art and artists of all kinds, and he believes the only universal truths have to do with how humans treat each other and all living things.

where:

BCTC Newtown Campus
Learning Commons, CB120

when:

Wednesday, March 30
Reception – 4:00 p.m.
Reading – 4:30 – 5:30 p.m.

Photo by McKenna Rigney

